A fun ride!

On the menu you have some light dungeon crawling, a few puzzles for extra loot, two characters with a few gear slots and a four colour crystal system (cards) to simulate battles. Each crystal also have a value (used for damage calculation).

Pretty simple mechanic offering different synergies between skills and crystals. Enemies also have predictable actions and a set of colour weaknesses that you can\should take into account.

You need around 7hours to get through the full content, unlock all hero skills, gear them out and increase your crystal values.

Looking forward to a DLC or sequel, good job Itharius!. Well having completed this game I have to add my voice to the chorus of good reviews this game has received. It's a basic, not too involved dungeon crawler that is fast paced and fun. The game employs some interesting mechanics with the use of colored crystals to deal damage and power abilities.

There were some frustrating moments with the monsters always seeming to get the first move after the first round of combat, this basically gives the monsters 2 back-to-back actions between the 1st & 2nd rounds which seems a little unfair. Also the monsters had a disturbing tendency to survive with just one hit point to eek out another combat round. However, I did like that if you did fail you kept the gold\loot you had collected so far, and could even abandon a quest to go back to town and regroup in order to try again. So eventually you should get strong enough to make it through and be able to progress.

Once you complete the campaign and max out your characters there not much replay value here unless you just want to complete all the achievements, however, for the price the game provides several hours of enjoyment and challenge and would a good addition to any collection.
